

We asked a few friends to test our website and tell us anything they thought about the website. We only received 4 responses but these were the critiques we received.

- Multiple people mentioned they wanted the “Name” tag on the task list to change to “Task”. They thought they were supposed to put their name again, not the name of their task.
- On the mobile view, when users would type the screen would add the keyboard and raise our watermark over the area they were typing. It was a little annoying to two of them, but it didn’t hinder them from using our website
- They all liked the customization. They liked the bomb icon and the dark theme
- One member said they would’ve liked a light mode or to add motivational quotes in the background. If not a light mode they wanted a more motivating color.
 - I understand the critique for a light mode, but I disagree with the motivational quote idea. It adds more to the timer page and while he said it would increase the want to do more work, it would add more distractions to take away from working time. If you’re on this website you should already be planning to do work, not searching for motivation to do work
- One person said to add more explanation of the pomodoro technique. This was before our info cards with pictures were added, but I also think they just didn’t read the info section.
- Users wanted more themes
 - impossible in the time constraint, but glad we got one theme in